Mr. George Warner Irons, son of Postmaster BO Irons of Linesville, died at the residence of his parents on Saturday morning last, after an illness of over three years. Deceased was for several years the Linesville correspondent of the Courier, "Wig," keeping up his work even after he was confined to the house. His sickness sprang from a severe cold which developed into consumption, and while it's ravages were combated at every step by the best medical skill and the most assiduous and careful nursing, it slowly but surely wore his life away. An only child, a son who has developed business qualities (unreadable) which should have made his life a credit to him (unreadable) pleasure to his parents, met an untimely death, though expected almost at any time for a year past, is yet a terrible blow to his parents and friends. He was sworn in as Deputy Postmaster at Linesville in the spring of 1874, and was retained in that position till his death. From early youth he had been an attendant and worker in the Sabbath School, and some eight years ago he united with the Baptist Church of which he ever after remained a consistent member, he was a member of Linesville Lodge, IO of OF, and was buried with the honors of the order, Rev. CT Jack, officiating, assisted by Rev. EM Alden. The largely attended funeral, at which many former residents of Linesville united with the friends at home, attested the honor and respect with which the deceased was held by all. The borough schools were closed that teachers and scholars might attend. He had anticipated his death and made all the necessary preparations for his funeral, and his wishes were faithfully carried out. Mr. and Mrs. Irons have had a heavy cross to bear in the past few years, but in their affliction they have the consolation of the sympathy of a host of friends.
